We all know that the U.S Justice System is flawed. But, did you know that 2 in 25 people on death row are exonerated? How did this high error rate come to be? This rate of error should be the lowest of all criminal behavior due to the severity and extra procedures that are necessary to convict someone to death. This project seeks to find a holistic answer to this conundrum through sociological, psychological, historical, and logistical perspectives on the Criminal Justice system and who it affects disproportionately.
