Current U.S. Drug Policy and Alternative Paradigms

This panel will discuss the current state of U.S. drug policy including its successes and failures. Panelists will consider whether the Obama Administration's recent decision to not prosecute medical marijuana sellers or users signals a change in U.S. drug policy. The panel will also explore the federalism implications regarding the differences between state and federal law given the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Raich.

Cross Border Flows: Drugs, People & Trade

This panel will explore how boundaries – physical, metaphysical, and legal – influence the movement of drugs, people, and trade in a globalized environment. Border in/security is related to the flows of illegal drugs and human trafficking, the corruption of public institutions, and the dilution of citizenship and exploitation of migrant workers. Human capital becomes increasingly dislocated behind a veil of privacy and property protections for the benefit of corporations and consumers. Meanwhile, disparities in drug laws and sentencing have contributed to racial divides in the war on drugs. Panelists will explore the legal fault lines that allow privileged actors to internalize the gains from trade while externalizing the costs and burdens on vulnerable populations.

Narcoterrorism, Organized Crime, and Political Corruption

This panel will examine the interplay between narcoterrorism and organized crime and how these crime syndicates facilitate the growth of the drug trade domestically and internationally. This panel will consider issues including whether harsher regulations on drug trafficking would affect weapons smuggling and human trafficking, if a crackdown on organized crime will effectuate a crackdown on narcoterrorism or terrorism in general, if an end to organized crime is realistic, and if the current justice systems both domestically and internationally are sufficient to stop organized crime.

ABOUT CHAPMAN LAW REVIEW

Chapman Law Review is currently in its thirteenth volume of publication. Each year the Law Review's symposium brings top scholars and practitioners together to provide critical analysis of important legal issues. The symposium issue, published each spring, has distinguished Chapman Law Review as among the top 25% of the nation's general content law journals – a very proud accomplishment for such a young publication. For more information about law journal rankings, visit <http://lawlib.wlu.edu/LJ>.
