I would tell them to go after what they’re passionate about! Everything can open up a new door and you never know what it could lead to!

Current Research
Last summer, I was fortunate enough to create a documentary revolving around Asian American women and the how Hollywood stereotypes affected their everyday life. Because of this, my research began to be geared more towards towards cultural education, specifically Ethnic Studies and incorporating this major into more nationwide curriculum, even beginning with elementary schools. From planning the Ethnic Studies summit alongside my class cohorts, to becoming the student chair for the Chapman Diversity Project Curriculum Task Force, my research has only continued to expand as one of the first to minor in Africana Studies at Chapman University. I believe that all students, regardless of age, should have the choice to study not only their origin and roots but also close the educational gap by expanding their cultural consciousness, learning from all who have contributed to America.
