Advice
I would tell someone that is looking into getting into research to not be afraid to ask questions and ask for help. Make sure you double and triple check everything.

Current Research
The research we conducted looked at the dimensions of speaker credibility and compared what people thought about them based on the background color the speaker was standing in front of. Participants were shown a video, that was chosen with random selection, with a speaker discussing a campus organization in front of either a white, red, or blue background. Then they were asked a series of questions about the video to determine the dimensions of credibility. We found that the blue background had a higher rate of trustworthiness than the other two background colors.
