Leon Leyson spoke of many memories from his time on Schindler’s List. The memory that stood out to me was when the men on Schindler’s List were at the Gross-Rosen concentration camp while being transferred to a new factory. Leon recalls the brutality of the soldiers, and said, “Because it was such an unreal situation, I couldn’t tell day from night, and I couldn’t tell how long I was there.” I depicted a sun and moon over a group of people to symbolize this memory. Also memorialized is the eye representing hope. When hope was shattered, Leon found a way to hold onto it.