Over 70% of the Earth’s crust is created in the middle of oceans along volcanic chains, called mid-ocean ridges or ocean spreading centers. Ocean water, rich in minerals, can circulate down into these mid-ocean ridges and form hot black smokers on the seafloor. This heated mineral-rich water provides food for millions of ocean life forms. It has been suggested that life on earth started at ocean spreading centers around these smokers.