

Can Beauty Really Save the World?

Theological Aesthetics in a Time of Chaos

featuring Griset Lecturer —

Susan Ross

What do the arts have to say when the world is in crisis? Although the arts may seem irrelevant, attention to them – in this case, music – can make a difference in how we understand our own responsibilities to each other and to the natural world. The lecture will draw on recent examples of music and how they can transform the ways we see and act as agents of transformation.

Susan A. Ross is Professor Emerita of Theology at Loyola University Chicago, where she taught for over thirty years. She is the author of three books and numerous articles and book chapters and is a past president of the Catholic Theological Society of America. She lives near Chicago with her husband and retired racing greyhound, plays the piano, tutors immigrants in English literacy, and remains actively involved in academic theology.
