Dylan Trumbull has worked in many fields to gain a diverse range of experiences: first within the contemporary art world, interning at Gagosian Gallery in LA, New York, and London. After graduating with a BFA degree in Studio Art, Dylan flew across the world to Italy to gain a new perspective through an internship at the Peggy Guggenheim Collection in Venice. He then started an apparel company (Riin), finished an Ironman race, and worked coaching high school water polo and teaching the arts.

By doing these things, Dylan found what brought him happiness. Over the years post undergrad, he learned that this thing "passion" society talks about is subject to change. He is a man who loves visual stimulation, creating and surrounding himself with people who challenge him. Now finds himself with a graduate degree in education (from Chapman!) and is teaching high school photography and art at Unity Middle College High School.
